Reading on Screens

People read differently on screens than on paper. Most readers scan the page instead of reading every word, which makes long sentences harder to understand and remember.

Short paragraphs, clear headings and plain words all help. This paragraph continues on the next page without a full stop at the end of this line, so it should be joined with the text from the previous page.

Notes

Page numbers and the running header should not appear in the reading view.